GLOBAL ENERGY CRISIS

China's climate goals hinge on a $440 billion nuclear buildout

BLOOMBERG
November 3

NUCLEAR POWER ONCE seemed like the world's best hope for a carbon-neutral future. After decades of cost-overruns, public protests and disasters elsewhere, China has emerged as the world's last great believer, with plans to generate an eye-popping amount of nuclear energy, quickly and at relatively low cost.

China has over the course of the year revealed the extensive scope of its plans for nuclear, an ambition with new resonance given the global energy crisis and the calls for action coming out of the COP26 Climate Summit in Glasgow. The world's biggest emitter, China's planning at least 150 new reactors in the next 15 years, more than the rest of the world has built in the past 35. The effort could cost as much as $440 billion; as early as the middle of this decade, the country will surpass the US as the world's largest generator of nuclear power.

The government's never been shy about its interest in nuclear, along with renewable sources of energy, as part of President Xi Jinping's goal to make China's economy carbon-neutral by mid-century. But earlier this year, the government singled out atomic power as the only energy form with specific interim targets in its official five-year plan. Shortly after, the chairman of the state-backed China General Nuclear Power articulated the longer-term goal: 200 gigawatts by 2035, enough to power more than a dozen cities the size of Beijing.

It would be the kind of wholesale energy transformation that Western democracies, with budget constraints, political will and public opinion to consider, can only dream of.

It could also support China's goal to export its technology to the developing world and beyond, buoyed by an energy crunch that's highlighted the fragility of other kinds of power sources. Slower winds and low rainfall have led to lower-than-expected supply from Europe's dams and wind farms, worsening the crisis, and expensive coal and natural gas have led to power curbs at factories in China and India. Yet nuclear power plants have remained stalwart.

"Nuclear is the one energy source that came out of this looking like a champion," said David Fishman, an energy consultant with The Lantau Group. "It generated the whole time, it was clean, the price didn't change. If the case for nuclear power wasn't already strong, it's a lot stronger now."

China says its plans could prevent about 1.5 billion tons of annual carbon emissions, more than what's generated by the UK, Spain, France and Germany combined. For those who see nuclear power as critical to weaning off planet-warming fuels like coal, it's a wildly exciting experiment at a scale proportional to the problem. And yet, even if China can develop the world's most cost-effective, safe, flexible nuclear reactors, the US, India and Europe are unlikely to welcome their biggest global adversary into their power supplies. CGN has been on a US government blacklist since 2019 for allegedly stealing military technology.

In July, the UK began looking for ways to exclude CGN from its Sizewell reactor development. Iain Duncan Smith, Tory Member of Parliament, put it bluntly: "Nuclear is critical to our electric power, and we just can't trust the Chinese."

China's ultimate plan is to replace nearly all of its 2,990 coal-fired generators with clean energy by 2060. To make that a reality, wind and solar will become dominant in the nation's energy mix.

Nuclear power, which is more expensive but also more reliable, will be a close third, according to an assessment last year from researchers at Tsinghua University.

Other countries would have to stretch to afford even a fraction of China's investments. But about 70% of the cost of Chinese reactors are covered by loans from state-backed banks, at far lower rates than other nations can secure, said Francois Morin, China director at the World Nuclear Association.

That makes a huge difference because most of the cost of atomic energy is in upfront construction.

Biden uses trip abroad to confront China on climate

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Glasgow, November 3

OVER FIVE DAYS abroad at two global summits, President Joe Biden showed a new willingness to openly confront China over climate change and its lack of leadership on the global stage.

Biden ended his time at the UN climate summit in Scotland on Tuesday by chastising Chinese President Xi Jinping for physically skipping the event and failing to make the level of commitments that roughly 100 other nations did to curb greenhouse gasses. Xi also avoided the earlier Group of 20 summit in Rome, allowing Biden to dominate the conversation as he met with his French, Italian, British and German counterparts.

"We showed up, and by showing up we've had a profound impact on the way I think the rest of the world is looking at the United States in its leadership role," Biden said at a Tuesday news conference wrapping up his trip abroad.

Biden added that China had made a "big mistake" by bypassing the events because "they've lost an ability to influence people around the world."

But Biden's global progress and willingness to challenge China, a stance that also was critical to the rise of his predecessor Donald Trump, may be lost in the fog of domestic politics.

Biden jettied back to Washington to confront his deepest challenge yet as he struggles to pass $3 trillion in new government spending, including $55 billion to combat climate change. His poll numbers are flagging.

The headwinds could worsen in Congress, where a wave of retirements bodes poorly for holding on to Democratic majorities in next year's elections.

And another blow greeted his arrival: Republican Glenn Youngkin defeated Democrat Terry McAuliffe in the race for Virginia governor, an outcome widely thought to cast another shadow on the 2022 elections and reflect poorly on Biden's own agenda as well as his efforts to campaign for McAuliffe. The president stressed that he wants to compete against China, rather than have conflict. But he also showed a new strategy of using climate as a cudgel against Beijing.

White House national security adviser Jake Sullivan told reporters during the trip that China has an obligation to "step up" on climate and the US will keep pressing Beijing. One tool might be economic penalties: Biden brokered deal with the European Union to block "dirty steel" made possible by Chinese coal plants.

The president outlined his thinking by quoting his father at Tuesday's news conference. "My dad had an expression. He said the only conflict worse than one that's intended is the one that's unintended," the president said, adding that he wants to make sure in an upcoming virtual meeting with Xi that there are no misunderstandings.

Biden was well-received on the world stage, where he shared backslaps, handshakes and elbow-bumps with global leaders across two major international summits, with European Commission President Ursula von der Leyden referring to him as "dear Joe."

He scored victories on key priorities like a global minimum tax on corporations and boosted global commitments to combat climate change.
